Who else plays? I can't be the only one!

I've done some 2nd edition stuff, right now I'm in a 3.5 game, playing a warlock (Jill, my only angsty character ever) oh yay i feel so special im the first to reply. Yea i play some DnD im currently the DM of a party. Anoying the campaign im doing is made for a steritipical party and my group is far from it. That mithral plait mail is useless as no one is preficient with it. Other than that yay for warlocks. I played a half fey warlock once (eat charm person at will and 20 charisma)

I play D&D... my favorite character was actually this female bard I made... It was just us guys around the table, and they wanted a girl in the party... they debated it for awhile, then looked at me as I was rolling up the stats for it.. I had already decided I would do it, but when they looked at me, I said. "What?" the DM looked at me and said. "Well you are the one who looks good in a dress." We all burst out laughing.. Good times....

I miss playing that character.. played her for 2 years, lvl 20 bard, lvl 5 warchanter... Fun character to have around.

I'm new to the game, myself. I barely know how to play and there's nobody around to teach me and worse is that there's nobody I know that plays. And I can never learn how to do things through reading alone.

It's funny. My friends say D&D is too nerdy for them, but sometimes we randomly break into informal LARPing. It's more a session of Live-Action Godmodding than anything else.

I actually played my first game of D&D like three days ago with my cousin, and it was soo much fun. i figured with all the nerdy rap about it, that it would be lame, but it was really cool, screw what people say, im a nerd/dork and i embrace it B) lol

I have the 3.5 books, but i never found anyone that wants to play :S. So instead i usually just play some of the dnd comp games (forgotten realms ftw!)
