
First person you came out to

Posted by G Dizzle - 2005/09/01 02:59

I was just wondering if you came out to a friend first or a family member? and what it was like?

I personally came out to a friend first.

I was kinda forced out the closet. I wrote a love letter to a boy in my class, and my teacher found it, and told my parents. Yer no, for 'my own good' and all that.

So does that mean technically I came out to that boy first? I mean I never said, listen I'm bi, listen I'm gay. I just said. I love you.

Anyone else get grabbed from the closet kicking and screaming I wonder?

The first person I came out to was my best friend because I felt she needed to know and as well it stopped her from trying to set me up with her friends. I wasn't really forced to come out of the closet but when it came to telling my parents, I was looking for a way to tell them and they kinda provided it. They wanted to know why I didn't have a girlfriend I sat there and didn't say anything and they asked me if I was gay so I told them I was. It was a big relief

I came out to my brothers first. They kinda already knew anyway plus we get on great so it didn't change anything.

If I was able to tell them, friends would be no problem :P

he then proceeded to drunkenly tell my best friend at a restaurant he was working at and the news spread like wildfire oh yeh, this was on xmas eve hence why i now despise christmas

I told my best friend first, though I'd been perfectly comfortable with it for... well, always. I've never been ashamed or hesitant when it comes to my sexuality. My friend's mother and 'step-mother' (no same sex marriage here yet) have been together for like 8 years, so I knew she'd be fine with it.

first person I came out to was my girlfriend! we had been going out 3 months and she really loved me... now we're best friends

severe depression followed for both of us, and I started asking for help by emailing a suicide prevention center my parents were the next ones to find out I was gay when they read those emails, they panicked over the suicide part, but it showed that they care, and they don't think being gay is wrong anymore, which is comforting however I'm not really "out" yet, my friend and I are still pretending to be gf and bf, I'm still depressed, and no one else knows... well I guess college will be different

I came out too, well not exactley, to the guy who well may aswell say sparked my intrest in guys, i sitll love him, he doesnt swing that ways so too speak, but was cool with it, I think until the offical thing he didnt belive me, then I told the person on pure randomness, who is now my boyfriend of... well over 16weeks now, through SMS, he asked me out about 3 days later, turns out he liked me :), and then.. well after the 2 week holidays (aus).. turns out someone had read his phone, then the whole school knew (400+ people)... yet my folks still dont know and I want to tell my bro soon, Im jsut building up the courage :D, but yeah.. I told a few close friends during school after I knew about the rumor, better they hear it off me anyhow... but my complete coming out was... unexpected to say the least

First person I told was my best friend, who was a girl. She'd suspected for a while, after seeing my disastrous attempt at a relationship with a girl, so it came as no great shock.

My family still doesn't know and as they are mostly homophobic, I don't intend on telling them soon. I'm really close to my family and I would'nt want anything to break that up.

I've only told one person explicitly, and she was the first person to know - my best friend. With my other friends (and new friends), I don't make an effort to tell them. I just hint or wait until it comes up in conversation.

Much less stressful than having to make a grand announcement or something, hehe.

With my mum, I'm planning something along these lines in the next few weeks.

Me: Mum, do you mind if I go out with some friends tonight and be back late?

Mum: Where are you going?

Me: To G-A-Y probably.

Mum: Aah, ;)

I remember my sister knowing like it was only a year ago... which it practically was. Was sort of forced into it as well, she was outside my window and I was inside on the computer checking out...pictures...and then I heard knocking. Scared the willies out of me! She was outside smiling and waving. Adjusted myself and then I went to open my window and she was laughing her head off and she was well cool with it. Phew. I don't remember being so freaked in my life...

I personally came out to a friend first.

I came out to the first person just yesterday, he wasn't even a close friend but a mate that I guess I'd grown to trust and I knew he wouldn't take it bad since he was friendly with another gay guy in our form, anyway he was surprised at first since it's been a kinda joke that I'm gay because I don't have any GF (how right they were) but he just said he wouldn't tell anyone till I'm ready and left it at that, I'm gonna see him for the first time since that tomorrow which has got me kinda nervous but oh well what can I do :)

I'm seeing about telling some more people soonish, his reaction really gave me the support I needed to start telling everyone ^^

I first came out to a girl I had met on a school trip which I went on for 2 days with...she was a sixth form and was really nice, and for some reason I felt comfortable telling her. Turned out she was a lesbian who thought I had fancied her on the trip. 0_0 worst gaydar ever. :P but she helped me come out to my friends after that and all that.

The first person I came out to was my best friend Monica. She kind of dragged it out of me, back in 2004. It was a week before Valentine's and we were talking about our plans. She wanted to set me up with some girl so I had to tell her the truth. Her boyfriend was there too. They both took it great, now the whole group I hang out with knows (all girls, minus the aforementioned boyfriend).

The first "straight" guy I came out to after that would prove to be my first long term relationship which ended back in December. I was sure I was going to crap myself. He was Arab & Muslim and I was sure I'd get told off... I was wrong, to say the least. :P

The way you rave about him, it evades me why your relationship ended.

Anyhow, what a wonderfully blunt generalisation; a comment though, if he's sleeping with guys, he's not really muslim!

As to why it ended, he couldn't bring himself to "stay gay" and went back to women. I found this out only after he cheated on me with one.

The first person I came out to I did not know at all, it was eight grade he was a guy in my class and he asked, I told him the truth. I felt great, though I am a bit happy that we go to different high schools. In high school, I came out to 2 peers and two teachers. I'm guessing the teachers have told the other teachers.

it was kinda bad though when the kids at school found out, because of how it happened. my ex-girlfriend found out that i had a crush on my best friend at the time (steve) so she told him and it spread through the school like wildfire because i used to be popular back then and it was big news. he kind of exploded on me and we got in this big fight, but i don't really hang out with any of those people anymore and things have died down alot. i'm just glad i don't have to worry about people finding out anymore.lol

I first came out to a 'girl'friend in my class, she was supportive and she said that I was "flaming" and i found it halarious... Then as she told people around my school, I seemed to get lower and lower on the "Charts" but as soon as summer came those people (guys) who were making fun of me were actually either supportive or hiting on me... I dont like that cause they all were acting like sex's all they wanted, so i said no to every last one of them... then when the school year started again, there was a sudden "Outting Outburst" at my school, Jocks, skaters, goths, and whom ever else started to tell who they were... which was pretty cool, but now everyone is pretty equal at my school, and i think that is awesome...

O... and one out of every four guys you meet are either BI or GAY...

Proven fact.

Well, first I came out to my friend Sunny, but I'm not sure if it really counted, because it was 'I think I like girls,' in a scared-shitless seventh-grader way. Then, summer of eighth grade I told my friend Suzanne, who was totally cool with it, and my other friend, Sam. That fall (freshman year) I came out to my english class, and since then anyone who asks me will get an honest answer, but I don't advertise it. Oh, and I came out to my parents May of freshman year.

Well, first came out to one of my closest friends (a girl), and only because my closest friend (also a girl) had asked me out and it was going to be too hard to say no and tell her why (although, looking back, I don't know why I thought that as it's only made us closer!). I didn't say it outright though, my friend asked me if I was gay after I had said no to almost every other alternative as to why I couldn't go out with her lol. By that point I was writhing on the floor nearly in pain lol...

That was 7 months ago (to the day actually!) and since then I have told all my close friends and not had a single bad reaction, so you could say I'm very very lucky! :woohoo:

Parents though will be a different matter: I want to tell my mum but just can't find the right time, or the right words (although I'm gay would be pretty effective I'd imagine lol). My dad's a bit of a homophobe tho, don't know if mum would keep it from him so I think they're best left until I go to uni... :unsure:

Hey guys,

I first came out to my best and oldest friend. We've been friends for a long time, since like 5th grade, and he said we still are best friends, so he was cool with it. I then told some of my other friends, and they were cool with it, they even wanted to help me find a bf ;) . I even found out that one of my friends is bi.

So now everything is seems to be going good, except i havnt told my conservative, catholic parents yet.....:(bUt so far its all good

I told one of my best friends dominic first in high school, she was fine with it. But then the next day, everyone in my year found out andthe day after the rest of the school found out and i got a lot of name calling from a lot of the male students in the school, all the girls in the school wax fine about it as they always asked me for fashion and make up tips.

Then a few months later i finally told my mum when we were in mcdonalds and while she was eating her burger i told her and i thought she was going to hit me or something but all she said was ok. So that was the first jhurdle and then i told my dad and i was surprised with him as he was fine with it aswell. He even said that as your uncle and yhour cousin is gay and the family is fine with them, why wouldn't we be ok with you. So I didn't really have it that bad.

the first people who knew i was gay were my sister and my best friend (who is also friends with my sister). i didn't really come out to them, they kinda just told me they knew i was gay and i was like, "yeah..."

then i came out to my friend adam after he came out to me. and we ended up going out for awhile, but not anymore.

and my guidance counselor told my parents (and i loathe her for it :angry:) first my dad was depressed because he wanted a son who would "follow in his footsteps" or something...then he started being really mean and he wouldn't let me see my boyfriend...but he's cool with it now...and my mom doesn't really have a problem with it although she tried telling me stuff like "it's just a phase" and "i'm only a teenager, how can i really know what i am yet" which i thought was stupid because, if i was straight, she wouldn't be like "oh, it's just a phase, you might end up being a flaming homo" but all my friends know and i'm lucky to have great friends who are cool with that. and my immediate family all knows and have no problem with it, but i'm not allowed to tell my grandparents :unsure: so i'm worried about when it's time for my prom because i'm not going unless i go with a guy, but i'm afraid my parents will have a problem with that...

The first person I told was my gay cousin....He was okay and everything with it, obviously, but he kept prodding me for info as to how far I had gone with someone, and that I was too young to know what I want, blah blah blah....And I was like.....OMG that's so sweet that you care and all....But....This has been a loooong time coming.....lol.....And my other cousin (female) kinda found out at the same time, because I guess my gay cousin (Eric) shrieked rather loudly when he read the e-mail, and she read it over his shoulder, and then I guess my aunt came down and saw it too, though I didn't find out until much later on, when I was freaking out about telling her.:angry: He should've told me earlier!! Many awkward conversations could've been avoided there!!!! All in all though, I haven't had too many issues with this stuff, though my homophobic brother still doesn't believe I'm actually gay. The ironic part about that is he was always the one to call me a fag and such.....Lol I guess he's just weird like that.

well i came out to my best friend (girl) right after she asked me out...it was weird cos she was like 'i like u... as more than a friend', then im like 'umm, im gay'...(lol)... she laughed then looked at me, and realised i wasn't kidding...and then she's like...'oh', and then im like 'yeh'...then there was the uncomfortable silence...followed by she saying 'lets go shopping already' (we where on our way to the shops)...she is in Queensland now, but we still talk on msn...

I'm actually not sure lol

Ok, well, my parenst found some porn involving men only :lol: and confronted me about it and I told them I was gay, this was when i was 12 or 13, they then told me I was going through puberty and I needed more time to make up my mind. I think they were pretty shocked.

So I think my parents didn't accept it when i was taht young, but when i reiterated the point only a couple of months ago, they were cool with it.

So yeh the first person I told and believed me was a friend (girl) and we aren't even that close, but we go shopping together LOL :P

came out Feb. 24, 2006 at exactly 8:41 pm PST on msn to my then best friend. he was really cool with it, quite supportive. a year has passed and i've made a lot more best friends, came out to them.....they were all cool with it as well. and now, most of my schoolmates know. i had a huge identity crisis before all this.

i know a few gays and bi's personally now, and i've had one sexual experience with another guy since coming out.

lol, it took me awhile to get to the stage of coming out face to face, rather than online on msn. my friends kinda forced me to do it face to face once, to one of my other friends.....they said i needed to do it face to face. the second guy i came out to, one of my best friends, started laughing hysterically online "LOL". at first, he thought i was joking and that another friend was telling me to say it. the third guy i came out to, also online and another best friend, didn't say much after i told him.....he later told me he was in complete shock, and he was very supportive.

apparently, a lot of my friends never expected it from me.....i really tried to act straight back then.

I found out he was gay about 4 months before this....but I wasn't ready to tell anyone until I knew for sure, and obviously coming out to him was easy, it was just a bit weird because I have known him since we were 4....I was 16 when I told him, I then told other friends but have still a lot more friends to tell....plus my family which I really can't be arsed with!

I came out to a friend of mine who is gay. He gave me the backing I needed to come out to my best friend, and then most of my other friends. All of them were cool about it, and now i don't really deny being gay, so anyone (in my school, etc) who wants to know, can find out and I will even confirm it if they don't believe my friends.

As for my parents... I think I'm going to wait on that a while. They'll understand, but they may be crushed and stuff, so I think later is best.

Her: Anything new?

Me: No, bi-sexual....

Her: Oh really? Cool, tell me all about it.

Since then she came out to me as bi like 7 months later.

I first told one of my (female) friends that i didnt think i was completly straight a year and a half ago, this was after getting with a random girl at a club who would end up being my first girlfriend. Then i told my boyfriend of the time that i was bi, all he said was thank god, i thot you were going to tell me you were gay and then dump me! About 4 months after that i decided i was gay and broke up with him and ended up dating the random girl i had gotten with months before. My best friend, matt, who is also gay, had figured this out near the begining and had almost outed me in the middle of physics class by mistake. im now in the process of telling all my other close friends.

My ex boyfriend hasnt spoken to me in almost a year, even though we have the same friends, the first friend i told took a while to get used to it but has now accepted it.

I havent officaily "come out" to my parents but i think they may have known before i did, since on my birthday a few years ago when i was wearing a knecklace that my boyfriend of the time had given me, my dad asked if it was from a "special" friend, i just laughed.

she was taking me home late in the evening from a football game and we were leaning on each other and i still remember when we passed the marquee from our high school for some reason in my mind i read "tell her" on it so i whispered it to her. she got off of me, looked at me in the eyes her braces shining from the gleam of the moonlight and whispered back, "and i love you anyways". then she kissed me on the cheek and cuddled even tighter.

currently the whole school pretty much knows. family... only my brother and sister in law... my parents are next :S

The first person i came out to was my sister. I'd been rdy to tell som1 for awhile, but i never had the confidence. Then my parents began to hav marriage problems, which got me down. I had all of these emotions and i knew i had to tell som1 because i cudn't coap with keeping everything bottled up inside. I still didn't hav enough confidence to come out face to face with som1, so i did it over a text, how lame is tht, take this advice never do it over a text :). Well anyway my sister was completely fine with it and our relationship hasn't changed 1 bit. Her reaction gave me the confidence I needed and bout 2 days later i came out to a gay friend, which was so easy, and now 1 month on, I know im ready to come out to more people, but "who will be fine about it?"

I came out to my friends first - typically a girl. I actually feel more comfortable letting girls know than guys, they tend to be more accepting. possibly because of fear that when you're coming out to someone, you're trying to make a move on them. me? thankfully everyone I've come out to is accepting. Some were shocked, some said they knew. One guy even asked me if I thought he was hot heh. It all depends on the person and whether or not they're ready to accept you. One thing, if you're going to tell your parents, make sure you have somewhere to stay, because some people I know have gotten kicked out by their parents.

I first told my best friend (a girl) how I was feeling really confused... and then over the months we just sort of assumed I was gay I guess. But then with her support, I told my other best friend (a guy) flat out that I was gay. I haven't told anyone else though. I still remember my guy friend's reaction so perfect. He just kind of chuckled and was like "Really? That's cool. Now we can go check out chicks together."

I haven't really told anyone yet, I only recently accepted myself as bi, I plan on telling my best friend if he comes over this weekend.

At first I felt like I'd never come out, I would go out in public feeling everyone already knew I was bi, but I got over my fear of that. One day, I'll tell everyone, but right now, I barely have the nerve to tell my parents.

Re:First person you came out to

Posted by sundai_mornin - 2007/05/11 07:44

I used to keep a diary (bad idea). I had written that I was pretty sure I was bi and about a whole bunch of private matters. My older sister went through my stuff (as she normally does) and found it. She went around and told the rest of my siblings and my mom... I have a pretty bad relationship with all of them so we have never discussed it. They pretend they don't know and I pretend I don't know they know.

My ex-gf pretty much knows but we don't really talk about it much. I was still pretty confused while we were dating, because of how well we are together. She's great though. As for my friends I'm working on it.

I first thought that i could be a lesbian when i was 13yrs and confided in my best friend who just happened to be homophobic. It took 15 months of bullying from her before i chose to completely deny who i was i went out with a couple of lads etc. before deciding that i was bi. When i realised the true me i didnt say anything because of the past bullying 15 months later i came out to my senior youth worker and he gave me some advice line numbers etc to help me and give me the confidence to come out properly. My family are the only people who dont know that im bi. Im going to try and wait until after my exams before i tell them but i have a dilema about how to tell them because they are old-fasioned catholics, they are homophobic. So i have one more hurdle to get past but one isnt much.

Re:First person you came out to

It is funny cause I have always known I was gay, and I just kinda assumed other people did too, I never really thought about coming out, cause to me it didn t matter what people thought about it. I am a very private person, and I don t really talk about things like relationships with anyone but the person I am involved with, so I can see how someone would just not see that I was gay. I came out when I was 13, coming out as in I actually told someone straight out that I was gay. One day my sister asked me why I didn t have a boyfriend, and I was kinda shocked that she would ask something like that, because I was gay and I thought she should have known her being my sister and all, and then it just kinda clicked that maybe it wasn t as obvious to everyone else as it was to me, so I told her, and I was amazed because she had no idea. It is funny how things work out sometimes.

I first came out to my (male) friend because we were at a gig and it was us and 15 girls (!) that we were with and he tried to set me up with at least 3 of them so when they all went off to the loo as girls do, i told him. It took like a minuite to get him to understand me tho, a combination of the loud music and his confusion. After that, we became best mates, so it all went well :)

I came out to one of my very best friends first, and she was shocked because I had been dating her best friends (a girl) for a while, and just generally shocked too, but she's been great about it... I quickly told other close friends, but some of those close friends felt the need to blab to not-close friends and some of those not-close friends told my entire class. I guess it's not that big of a deal since I've already graduated, but I haven't told my mom and dad yet and it'd be nice to tell them as the primary source... I'm just not ready to yet though. No one I've come out to has had a negative reaction to my face yet, so shrug.

God, i felt like a weight had been lifted off of my shoulders and i could finally be me around her. A year later i finally came out to my family, but not the way i intended....one of my "friends" decided to back stab me and show my mother my myspace, after that i decided it was time to come out and finally live the truth and not a lie. But if i had not of came out to Kayla i would have never decided to come out....so Thank You Kayla for understanding, I LOVE YOU GIRLIE!!

I came out to my cousin and best friend Emma first. I did it through text message. I couldn't have done it any other way because I'd never get the words out! I wanted her to do something and I said if she did I'd tell her a secret. In the end she guessed and said was it about my sexuality, and that was that! I had been dying to tell her for ages but I couldn't think of the best way to do it. She already had her suspicions but didn't want to force me into telling her either, but she has been really supportive. After that I managed to tell a few more people including my older sister, but I didn't tell my parents yet. I wouldn't dare tell my older brother because he's the most homophobic person I've ever met, and that's starting to rub off on my little brother which is scary.

It was one of those things that just sorta happened cause i was gettin tired of living a lie. and we stayed up the whole night talking about everything and in the end it was really great. Im glad that shes trustworthy because im still waiting for the right time to tell all my other friends. My best friend has a brother whos gay so i hope that will help when i come out to him. Well it'll be the one year anniversary on Wednesday. Myself and three other friends (2 girls and 1 other gay guy) were hanging in a store and the one girl said that she like me. I tried to dismiss it at first by saying that I just wanted to be friends and that was it, but she kept hassling me and finally I flat out told her that I was gay. Slowly with time, I told my other friends and they told friends. Finally I wrote a letter to my parents so now I'm completely out. The girl that liked me became really supportive of me and now she's my best friend and I thank her all the time for getting my to come out.

The first person I came out to was my best friend Danielle. She was shocked at first because she thought I was as straight as can be. I was walking back from school with her and I just decided I'd had enough of lieing to my best friend so I just brought the conversation around to telling her. I was so nervous but after she was finally convinced I wasn't joking I think i had the best conversation of my life. I felt so free and could talk openly about whatever I liked... we then had a conversation about boys at my school and it was just fun.

the first person i came out to was to a friend at college, (little did i know, he was gay aswell!) anyway he was really supportive and even though it was really hard coming out to my other friends, it was really worth it cause now we have a laugh over things, i havnt come out to my family although i nearly did.... last xmas my sister said she and her friend want a gay mate for xmas, i nearly said how about a gay brother? i didnt though i was really scared. im not close with my family anyway just my sister. ah well!

I told my best friend, who is also gay. I was so terrified I had to write her a letter instead of saying it, even though she is into gay rights and all. When she read it she looked really shocked for about half a second and then said "That's amazing honey" and gave me a huge hug. It was all OK after that... until it came to telling my parents... :(

Thank you so much Jo, you're the best friend in the whole world

^^that would be me lol^^ and it was one of the best days of my life, has been better & better since. you're the best friend i could wish for sweetheart =) as for my own story, it was my older sister jess; i had been wanting to tell her for months but just never got the courage up, then i'd been left home alone & the puppy episode of "ellen" (the one where she comes out, for those of you who aren't avid followers lol) happened to be on...she came home and i just burst into tears and told her, & she was like "what the hell are you crying for you idiot, you know i don't care" haha (Y) so that was a pretty awesome first person to tell.

(unfortunately no one told me that the next happening in ellen is her first heart break. yay, that was a fun follow up! haha) i've been really pretty lucky the reactions of all the people i've told (which is everyone except extended family atm), but have had one or two bad experiences also, so i'd be really happy to offer help to anyone who is considering coming out/has and is worried, just message me.

much love, jo xx

I have two occasions where i was kinda forced out of the closet. The first was when my older sister, Becca, found my stash of porno, which was gay, so she put two and two together and called me on it. But it wasn't really coming out cause she just sorta dropped it afterwards. The other time i was a little messed up, AKA drunk, and online (a very deadly combination) and i told a friend who, in turn, told every soul he could. He was also gay so by his reasoning, outing me would make me want to date him, I didn't! Well it's sad cause im gonna have to "come out" once again only, this time, im in a college in the south of Illinois. And southerners do NOT like gays! Im sorta building up a strong friend basis before drop that on all of them.

Much less stressful than having to make a grand announcement or something, hehe.

With my mum, I'm planning something along these lines in the next few weeks.

Me: Mum, do you mind if I go out with some friends tonight and be back late?

Mum: Where are you going?

Me: To G-A-Y probably.

Mum: Aah, ;)

Wasn't too long ago actually- told a friend (guy) on the train home one day. He'd always be asking if I had my eye on someone, and I'd always make up some cover story. I really didn't want to keep up the charade anymore... anyway, he was pretty shocked but he was cool with it. Actually, I was probably more in shock than he was- never gave any thought to coming out until it happened then. The other day, i told another good friend of mine- he was ok with everything too and we've become much closer. A few problems though when I told him I had (still have?) a crush on him though... So far, no bad coming out experiences touch wood

I've never been actually able to say 'I'M GAY' though- both cases I led them on till they got it. Haven't told my parents either... :S

Re:First person you came out to

First came out back in February to a friend I'd met online about 3 and a half years ago. He'd helped me through a difficult stage in my life when I was a teen, we met randomly and I was trying to find my identity basically, where I came from, why I never saw my dad (although my mum had told me bits I wanted to know everything for myself) and wanted to be able to appreciate who I was. He helped me in doing that ever since and so it was a no-brainer to tell him first. He was more than alright with it and from there on I couldn't care who else I told, as long as he was there for me I was convinced I was fine.

I didn't go actively telling people unless I needed to. My mates asked the question themselves after I put it on my MySpace (just to see if anyone read it :P) and I answered yes lol, THE SHOCK :P With my mum I just told her the guy I'd gone to the cinema with was my boyfriend, I'm gay lol and she just stood there for 2 minutes with nothing to say. She's cool with it now though, I've even told her about what anal sex is like haha. Other friends found out in similar ways, I don't go on about it unless it comes up in conversation.

Re:First person you came out to

Well, technically the first guy I came out to was one of my friends who is bi/gay.

We were at a birthday party and most of our group of friends was there. So he and his boyfriend were talking about something, and I was just sitting on the floor next to the loveseat-thing they were sitting on. So he says something and turns to me and says, "Lemmie show you what you're missing out on..." trying to freak me out. He started leaning in to kiss me and I didn't flinch or anything. So he pulls back and was like, "Woah, he's not doing anything." Then he tries to see if I'd stop him or something if he just went ahead and kiss me. I didn't stop him, so he makes room for me on the loveseat and all three of us start talking about it and the rest of the group learned by listening in.

About 6 months ago to a close friend. I'd told her a couple of days before when we were discussing how much she knew about me that there was something she didn't know. She did lots of guessing (best idea she came up with was that I had a secret life and I wasn't who I claimed I was! not that far off i guess.) I promised I'd tell her one day. Nothing else was mentioned about it. A day or so after we were at a house party and in a kind of upset, drunken moment I said I needed to see her and then well kind of a blur, but after lots of "I can't, I can't, you'll be angry with me" I just said "Im gay" response..."Oh that explains the whole Alan thing" (Alan being a guy lots of my friends think I should go out with!) I cried abit, she told everyone else there (none of whom had heard) that it was the alcohol that had made me upset. We talked and I explained stuff she asked who I fancied, told me she loved me whatever and that was the end of it. I did talk to her quite abit about it all over the next week, I told one of our close friends a few weeks later and I was then outted by several of my friends a few weeks after that.(This is another story all together after I guess it was better than finding the "right time" to tell them all, but I still have lots of issues with the event!)

Family still don't know, who knows when/if I'll ever tell them and I guess I've not told that many people but hey we all know what gossip is like!

Only advice is tell someone you trust first and you need to be quite sure they won't turn round shout eughhhh and hate you forever (well you get my drift!)

Much love xxxx

So far I only came out to my sister, she was cool with it and even thought it was cute :lol: . So far she is the only one I came out to, I doubt I will come out of the closet any time soon with my friends, all of them are straight jock-type guys.. I kind of suspect that they already know, since lol I never had an real girlfriend in all my life even though the girls throw themselves at me :sick: . I am almost positive my mom knows, to my horror more then once in front of all the guys :ohmy: she would talk about how nice one of my sisters gay guy friends are and how I should meet him. My Dad on the other hand is the definition of Masculinity! He is a friendly good guy, :unsure: but I honestly have no idea if he will pummel me to death or simply give me a friendly pat on the back... Some bad news, lately my dads relationship with me is very strained, I think he knows or suspects. I am literally scrambling for any penny I can just in case the worse happens. Luckily one of my st8 jock friends is a real friendly guy who has his own place with his girlfriend, I have no doubt they will let my hang there just in case the very worse happens.. lol I think my sister told his girlfriend who told him that I am gay cause lately he keeps on asking me in a polite manner if I am gay. So far I merely joked off the question, but I think I am just going to tell him the next time he asks. :cheer: Vivi Gaydom!

I was so nerveous, i've being trying to tell him for a few months (i know that long) and everytime i would open a convo with him i would get nerveous and try and find the right time to tell him. After a while that nobody said anything, i wrote something like i have something to tell you. I have done that before but allways ended up erasing it. But i accendentially pressed enter. I was shaking so much.

Basicly i tolled him after and his reaction was the best.

i will never forget this he wrote : D; so?

i was so happy :laugh:

Well, let's see. . . it's been a little over a year, and it's only to one person. I had asked her how she would react if I was gay, ('cause we were a little crazy that night -- normally I wouldn't even delve into gay issues unless it was about my sister anyway) and she said "That'd be cool. We could check out guys together. Why'd you ask? Are you?" I tried to lie my way out of it, but my attempt was unsuccessful. It was funny, 'cause the next day we walked around town and did just that -- checked out guys. :D

I guess it was a little unexpected in my situation. It all worked out in the end, thank goodness. The next big leap will be the parents. I thought about telling my mom first, but I figure that I should tell my dad first, 'cause we don't really have a strong relationship, and it'll either strengthen our relationship break it -- although, if he can handle my sister 'coming out' then he can handle me doing it. It's not gonna be THAT big of a shock(although I'm not a drag queen, nor do I fit most of the gay stereotypes).

Haha, Chloe and Sylvie (sisters), at the same time. :ohmy:

It all started when I accepted it that Sunday, so on Monday I was listening to Diana Ross' "I'm Coming Out" on my iPod and grinning like a baby all the while I walked to school. I had been denying my homosexuality for two years beforehand/trying to change it. Anyway, at lunch on Monday I was just randomly happy. I'm a pretty happy guy but that day I was smiling and saying, "I'm so happy!" repeatedly... because I was. Chloe and Sylvie thought I was insane. :lol: "Why? GOD WHY?!?!" they kept asking with smiles on their faces... I said I wouldn't tell them there because there were others around, and that the "mood wasn't right." :blink: LMAO.

Anyway, after school I found Chloe and Sylvie then popped up (her locker is like three or four down). Then I still debated with myself whether or not to tell me... they were accepting of homosexuality and all, but this was big shit. So then I was like, "I'll tell you tomorrow," and kind of rushed off. Chloe was then like "okay, but you HAVE to tell me tomorrow!" but Sylvie said "what is it?" She obviously wanted to know badly. She even suggested leaving because she thought I might only want to tell Chloe.

Anyway, then I just decided "screw it" and I came back and kind of forced ourselves into a tight knit that no one else could break/walk through or hear what I was saying. That was then I said, "this weekend I accepted my homosexuality."

The looks on their faces were PRICELESS. :laugh: Chloe stood there in awe for five seconds before she just said "awesome" and gave me a hug, while Sylvie never opened her mouth; just glared at me. :whistle:

Haha, both were happy for me. It was a great experience. :)

Well, let's see, first person I came out to was my sister when I was about 14 or 15 I think. At that point I was so bottled up and ready to burst, that I just about choked on the words. Was a positive experience, but it didn't really help me because I was still hiding.

Coming out to my parents 3 years later was what did it for me. Didn't have to hide what I was looking at on the internet anymore (nothing bad I swear :whistle:), wasn't constantly watching my words, etc. Parents are in denial, it's been about half a year but what can you do.

This past wednesday I came out to the leader of my school's GSA who became a very close friend. He sort of figured I wasn't straight, so he called me to talk, sort of led up to it the asked me outright, but not at all in an accusatory way, like my friends who I've known for years that are my age. So I just told him, and he was so supportive. Too bad it was on the phone, cuz I really needed a hug.

My mom .(I admit it my mom has always been one of my best freinds) She said she knew because I left some porn on the computer(yeah and that was the point in the conversation where I wanted to disappear)

Okay, so this happened two days ago.

My mom sits me down and says , "I want to talk to you."

Those are never good. The first words that come out of her mouth say it all, "I know you are confused right now..." The moment she uttered those words, the little voice in my mind said, "Uh-oh, she knows."

It turns out I had saved my username and password on myspace, so all she did was click on. I had an alert for a new message from this guy I've been talking to. We talk IN DETAIL about sex, drugs, and a cornucopia of other not so parent friendly topics. She knows my whole life, the good and the bad. Especially the bad.

She actually was really cool about it. I mean what mom WANTS their kid to be gay? And I'm sure it was a huge shock for her to read all about it, but really she was more hurt that I didn't come to her first than anything. She told me that she will love me no matter what; gay, straight, or bi she will always support me and love me the same.

And she said I can bring boys over, too!

Yeah she's cool.

Even though I would have wanted her to find out a bit differently.

It was at my cousins 18th.

We were down the back talking. Just me and her and it was really personal, we'd both been going through stuff lately and it was good for both of us to talk. {{We'd been drinking a fair bit so it was easier to tell secrets :P}} She was telling me about what happened with her and her ex, and some really horrifying family secrets that I now sometimes wish I didn't know.

So since she was being really honest with me I decided to tell her I have a crush on a guy and she was really supportive. I know I can trust her now and it definately feels like we've become closer :)

edit: And now I think my mum might know because she might have went through my e-mails which had a few from GYC. She would be fine with it but i'm just now sure I want everybody to know yet.

This is gonna sound dumb but the first person I came out to was my ex bf (bf at the time). I hadn't really thought about my sexuality before. It just sort of suddenly occured to me that I was really happy with guys and didn't want to be with a girl. Suddenly I just blurted out to him "I'm gay" :woohoo:

You should have seen his expression. :dry: He was like wtf of course your gay.

I came out to my mom after that and she was pretty cool about it.

I came out to my best friend (female) this morning.

I tried for about an hour last night telling her I wanted to meet up with her to tell her something very important. She said she couldn't because she had projects she had to do, and asked me just to say it over MSN. I told her it was more of a face to face thing. Besides, I could always have told on Monday when school starts again. She had asked me if it was bad, I told her it was a happy thing.

The next morning, I messaged her and asked her if she really couldn't make time for a meeting. She replied that there was no way. So, after a moments hesitation I hit enter for the message "I'm gay." I swear time stood still and she didn't reply for a while. Finnaly she sent "really" and I replied yes. She asked me how long I knew and who I liked. She then said it really is more of a face to face thing. I had never had my hands shaking so much.

I was so happy to tell her, but I am still a little shaken by it. She said other people have come out to her before, and I was so tempted to ask her who they were. I didn't, mainly because I wouldn't want her telling someone without my permission, and I didn't want to tempt her.

I have never been so happy. And I have no idea how to tell my parents.

I came out to my best friend Miranda first well me ex bf called her and told her I was bi just cos he became an asshole and she told me she was bi too and then, after a few months, I finally realized I don't really like girls at all, so I told her that I'm fully gay, I think cos girls are kinda a turn off for me lol. Then I found out my whole group of best friends are bi lol. I was really shocked :laugh:

The first person I came out to was my friend Tyler. We were at a small group meeting for my church and we were at his house. we would always play around by getting all over each other during the meetings =). One time after the group I was sitting on his lap and he said: "What if i told you I was Bi?" And then i was like: "Back room. Now." So we went back there and he came out to me. Then I told him that I was also Bi. I was glad because i was planning to tell him anyway, and that made things easier.

The first person that i came out to was my cousin. It was a day after my 16th birthday in 2007. I had told her that i had to talk to her, so when I told her she just looked at me, then said "I know" and just started talking about how she had suspected and that she didnt want to say anything until I was ready to tell. Now we are really close.

About a year and a half ago I came out to my two best friends (both girls) the one was shockd but cool with it, and the other was like "OK, and....?" And on November 15th 2007 I came out on Facebook. It exploded, and by the following Monday I was out to my entire school. My mom later read the note and told me she had suspected it for a while. She said she still loves me and has been cool about it. Now it's just telling the rest of my family. I have no plans for that yet.

i first came out to a group of 3 girls and a guy on a field at school.
i went up to them and was all "can i have a talk to you..."
we found a little corner and i was all "yeah i like guys" and one of them said"oh finally! yeah we knew over a year ago" i was 13 at the time.

and then i told the rest of my friends a few months later, and my mom the same day i told the rest of them.
and she said something along the lines of "well, i always wanted a daughter, i suppose youll do" not living with my dad, ive never told him as i never speak to him.

and my grandparents think im Bi, so yknow sall fine.

alright so this is my first post.. anyways i haven't come out to anyone yet but i'm pretty sure they might have an idea. see on my Myspace i put orientation as bisexual and no one has said anything.. my Nexopia says homosexual as i am lesbian, but i don't have very many people on Nexopia that i'm like actually friends with in real life other than one of my friends who's bi but it's never talked about and my other friend Jeremy who is gay but that's about it. see i'm pretty sure my friends have the idea because like i'll have a picture of a girl in my dp like Tegan and Sara or Dani Campbell or something and a couple people are like oh do you think she's or they're hot or something and i'm just like "yeah lol :P " and that's all that's said really... and i'm thinking of coming out as lesbian to my friends soon well my close ones anyways.. like in a couple days hopefully.. see my mom on the other hand i don't know what she's thinking.. i think she might have an idea, a) i only wear guys clothes b) one day i was talking about the GSA at my school and she's like you've been talking about this alot lately, i was like yeah.. and she's like are you gay or something and i'm like no i don't think so.. i get pretty defensive lol (lying obviously) and c) she asked me if i was gay two otehr times.. i was watching this vid on youtube about some guy and he was like dad i'm gay and the dad like beat him up (all a joke) and my mom's like oh are you trying to tell me your gay?...

see i know she doesn't have a problem with it if i was.. at least i hope. i'm just kinda like hmm i think it might be a bit akward afterwards.

so i'm like hiding and deleting the stuff i do on the computer like this website or anything that would show up..

anyways sorry for the long post i just needed to gett it off my chest sorta.

well if you've read this far any suggestions on if i should come out to my mom and if you think she might know or my friends for that matter thx.

I actually came out to my closest friends in 8th Grade and then 9th I kinda became known funny thing that is also the same year I came out to my mother. She was okay with it well at least she acted that way I think she has some trouble with it because her father is really homophobic and not as liberal. But I know she is okay with it now. I found out that it was one of the biggest achievements I have done in my life.

well, i came out to one of my best mates first he was way pretty much accepting cuz he sorta guessed already. i the told a few more of my close mates and all was dandy. one of my mates, when i told her, she confessed to me she was bi (and she also fancied me as well which made her annoyed. i guess falling for someone who takes no interest in your sex is irritating...).

the it got out round the school. i was a bit bummed about that cuz a load of idiots wouldn't leave me alone and made fun of me but my mates supported me and twas alright n stuff. the hype eventually died down and a few more people came out in my year. turns out after i came out in school, there was a thriving gay community in my school i didn't know about! xD well, eventually i got myself a boyfriend so i realised i had to tell my 'rents soon. my dad was giving me a lift home and i said

'hey, can i erm...tell you something?'
'sure'
'i have a boyfriend'
'o...k...how old is he?'
'same age as me'
'ok'
and that was it. xD

sadly my mum didn't take it so well as i just came up to her when she was watching tv and i said 'i have a boyfriend btw'. she then was like...wtf? and went into a denial rant. that was a couple of months ago. she occaisionally tries to turn my straight (quite pathetically) and goes on about how i should be carrying on the family name and that i should have children and that 'its just not right'. oh, and she's worried about what she would have to tell HER friends :/

anyway, now basically most of my teachers, nearly all the students, all my mates and my close family (mum, dad n sis (i think she guess after looking on my msn - she doesn't care anyway when i told her)

Second person was my best friend, she was like "I still love you!" and i felt like saying "Nothing is wrong with me...bh." :P but i didn't. Third person, was a guy that gives me awesome advice and he was like "Cool, be confident in who you are." (i was having problems...) And thats it! Only two, three friends and my mom left to tell, the rest of the people i know will never hear the words "I am gay..." from my lips.

The first person i came out to proberly was my mom how it went?

she thought i was joking even though i was crying.

she then said to me that im just going to a 'phase' where i think i am but im not.

She then told me to not tell any one and that i should think about it more :(

occasionally she talks to me about having a family, having children and living my life.

she always asks who i go out with, wether its a friend or not, she asks whether its a girl or boy? and its mostly girls, she then asks if its my girl friend :(

so yeh not so well i guess.

i still havent came out yet.

but i have told a few friends, but i think they take it as a joke..

thats it.. this websites my next step XD

Best guy friend who I was pretending to date first, then best girl friend (only thing I've never told her is that I like her), and I'm trying to get the guts to tell my mom.

I've hinted at it before, and she said something along the lines of "Well, you know Zoe's parents (one of my other friends has two gay moms), these kinds of things never work out for same-sex marriage."

I didn't get it either. I had mentioned a few bi people, and asked her what she thought, and she brought up two lesbians who were happily married.

For the last time, I'm not gay, or straight. I'm bi.

Then he said "What? do you have testicular cancer? are you gay?" jokingly. I just said yes and he was like "no! that's not it! what is it really?!" and it was so surreal took me about half an hour to persuade him I wasn't joking.

I was sort of forced out of the closet. I send this email mentioning that I was gay and without thinking that it is a organization my mom is a part of I sended it anyway. She read that email in the morning and asked me if I was gay. I said I don't know and she implied that I was confused. Then after work my dad took me for a ride and asked me questions concerning homosexuality. I just came out to him and it was the most hardest thing I ever done in my life. Being that my family is Catholic I thought they would be hurt by the fact that I am gay. That was not even a issue.

I first came out to my best friend when she asked me what turns me on. I told her that she wasn't going to expect the answer I had for her and she didn't when I told her it was guys. Then a few months after that I came out to the rest of my friends and the entire school. Then the next month I told my parents in note when I left the house. I don't promote coming out to parents especially if you think that they won't like it because they most likely won't.

I seem to be unlike most ppl cause I came out to my dad first. He didn't believe me but when he realized I was serious he was probably the most supportive. I haven't told my mom yet cause she's kinda crazy and my parents are divorced so that why she's doesn't know yet. I think I've really confused my friends cause I changed my facebook status to say I like both women and men and no one has asked why. They just ignore my hints or some just don't talk to me anymore. I need to just say it to their face

Well, after I figured out I liked guys as well as girls, I came out to my best friend, who is a girl. She freaked out, hugged me, and started to ask me how I knew, when did i find out, "do you like someone?"...typical girl reaction :laugh:. I'm glad she took it that way (I mean, she's really supportive, but I wasn't sure how she was gonna take it). After that, I told my closest friends first, and they were all supportive. Hell, I think everyone I know knows by now, and they're all OK with it....except for my parents, of course, but that's a different story...
Thank god for liberal cities like the one I live in! :laugh:

The first person I came out to was my friend mark in 7th grade. We were standing by the big tree in our schools courtyard, just kicking back, then he starts asking me questions about all the girls we knew. Then it got sorta serious. I quickly made a half joke about this one guy i'll call "Kz". Then somethign told me to say I liked Kz, with only a simple nod.

Haha, the best part of it all, turned out he was gay too :D

Now this is confusing for me, as about a year ago, a friend asked me, and I think it started with a maybe, and then someone else asked, and it was a flat out no, and I alternated between those two for quite a while, not feeling ready, until it kind of became a game for me to wind up my friends, which was amusing for me, if not for them. Then one time in the changing room of all places, someone asked me whether I was bi, and I just said "yep", and I was kinda freaked out at how surprised they were, considering I thought they might have worked it out, given all the hints I'd dropped.

Advice: Don't try what I did, it just pisses everyone off. Not the best. Although, on the other hand it did make it easier to tell them in the end, I think.

But they were all really supportive a really nice. One of my friends thought I was joking and didn't realise until the next day.

well my best friend asked me one day since it came up in a text conversation...

at first i was joking with her but then i told her i was.

We're still friends and she's awesome :)

The second person i told was a guy i liked who was the fist guy i ever told i had feelings for.

we don't talk as much and he stopped flirting with me,

(don't ask)lol

Then people just assumed i was gay and i just went with it, but some people might still think i'm straight...

not a lot though...

parents, i'll deal with later, even though they do question my sexuality when they think i don't notice, so i just like to mess with them about it. i switch from feminine to masculine in front of them a lot to confuse them...

I did my first coming out to my friend, we were both 14 at this time. We were talking about love in general and I told him that I like some person from our school. He asked me who's this, but I didn't answered... He tried to guess and started to ask me what does SHE look like, so I was quite confused. :P But finally I dared to tell him the truth. I said "Listen... It's a boy..." :lol: He said nothing, but after a while he told me that it's OK and we can continue this talk tomorrow. We did and it was fine. :)

ok so the first person i came out to, was my best girl friend in 8th grade.
it was scary because it was like i knew i was gay but i was in denial about it. well until i started to hang around a girl who was fine just being her self. and i told her over myspace, the next day was awkward for me. and in second period she slipped me a not saying its alright, and that she didnt think of me any diffrent. i was soooo relieved. lolz

I'd had "sexual relationships" (at the ages of 10 and 12) with two guys before I first uttered the words, "I'm gay," to one of my older brother's friends whom I knew was also gay, and with whom I had a brief relationship. I was thirteen years old.

After a rumour at thirteen, people believed me to be gay, and I joked that I "was gay at weekends", I suppose hoping lessen the blow. I didn't really know at this time, but I denied any homosexuality after this point.

I properly came out at sixteen after telling it to two of my best friends, who were both girls. First as bi, then as gay. The first girl was really good about it, and the second was a bit, "Oh my God," but didn't have any problems.

I came out earlier this week actually, to 3 friends at once.

Which was probably a stupid idea, because you can't gauge their reactions. But they were all fine with it, and I expected them to be.

It was very awkward, I kept on apologising for not telling them. I almost got annoyed at them for being fine with it, just so I could validate my nervousness >.

hmm, 2 months ago i told one of my close friends over msn.

shes great! has purple hair, wears nothing but pink! and probably knows more gay people than anyone in the county...

so i figured she would HAVE to be fine with it. particularly given that she is a self confessed gay man in a womans body...

ofcourse she was, and has been my rock since then.

I first came out to my best friend. And got a really good reaction. But I don't consider that my first coming out. Since she and I had experimented together and had told each other than we were questioning.

So, my first coming out (that I consider) happened just a few minutes ago. :laugh: However, it went really went. I was so nervous before. It was just so relieving at the end.
